A Message from Our Leadership

Thank you for supporting JDC, the leading global Jewish humanitarian organization working in 70 countries to lift lives and strengthen communities. As members of the JDC family, together we fulfill our sacred mission of saving Jewish lives and building Jewish life.

For 105 years, we have been your boots on the ground—the hands that do the work, the minds that do the planning, and the hearts that do the caring. Over the years, we were there in the ghettos, the DP camps, and in Israel at the very moment of its birth.

We are proud of this distinguished history, but our focus is on the future. Today, hundreds of thousands of Jews across the globe are alone and destitute. There is no better, smarter, more direct way to help them than to support JDC.

Quietly and efficiently, we do whatever it takes to help Jews in need all over the world. Through JDC, you bring food, funds, home health care, and expertise. But what you really bring is hope.

Through JDC, you are on the ground in Ukraine, Russia, Belarus, Moldova, Hungary, Bulgaria, and other countries of Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union (FSU), caring for elderly Jews who are the poorest Jews in the world, lifting Jewish families, and nurturing stronger Jewish communities. Through JDC you also are in Venezuela, Morocco, Ethiopia, India, and places we can even talk about.

And of course, through JDC, you are in Israel today, empowering Israel’s most vulnerable citizens to change their lives. Partnering with the Israeli government, you are providing social R&D for the startup nation, ensuring that the rising economic tide in Israel reaches all Israelis. If our work is successful, we will ensure that Israel’s remarkable economic success in recent years is sustainable in the long run.

In addressing these urgent needs, we have made remarkable progress over the past year. To keep this letter brief, we will highlight three key accomplishments:

First, we are addressing a critical challenge in the FSU within the next decade, we must continue caring for tens of thousands of impoverished elderly Jews who are not Holocaust survivors. Eventually, we will have to provide this care with a much smaller budget, which will no longer include funding for our infrastructure from the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany (Claims Conference).

Second, the Claims Conference has helped us delay this challenge by increasing our FSU grant by almost 50 percent in the past two years. Nonetheless, our FSU team has already moved decisively to prepare for this future challenge and to update our care model in other ways. Over the last two years, we have continued to provide life-saving services to those needy Jews while modernizing and consolidating our welfare center operations and back office functions, and we have developed new ways to deliver care with a lighter infrastructure.

Third, we have significantly broadened the base of JDC’s philanthropic support. For many years, we have received generous funding from Jewish Federations across North America, as well as from a small number of other historic partners. We value these relationships enormously, but we also know that our clients benefit when our work is supported by a more diversified funding base. Together, our Board and professionals have made great progress very quickly in pursuing this goal from the support we receive from our Federation and other our traditional partners, fundraising from all our other donors has increased by 45 percent in the past two years, going from $66 million in 2016 to $83 million in 2018.

Together, we also have achieved many other important objectives: completing new strategic plans for our Israel work and for FSU community development; a capital campaign to upgrade our flagship Lauder-JDC International Jewish Summer Camp at Sarner; our work with the Venezuelan Jewish community; a branding initiative to raise JDC’s profile with new audiences; a growth plan for Entwine to catalyze Jewish responsibility among young Jews and a new initiative sharing Israeli ag-tech and expertise with African farmers.

These successes would not have been possible without you. We are grateful for everything you do for JDC and proud to have you as our partner.

We also deeply appreciate the generous support we received in the past year from the Claluna Conferences, the International Fellowship of Christians and Jews (IFCJ), UJA-Federation of New York and other Jewish community federations across North America, the Azrieli Foundation, the Maurice and Vanieenne Wohl Charitable Foundation, the Jack Buncher Trust, the Ronald S. Lauder Foundation, World Jewish Relief, the Harry and Jeannette Weinberg Foundation, and other key philanthropic partners.

Admittedly, the problems faced by JDC and Jews across the world are daunting. But if we come together and approach them with intelligence and commitment, nothing is impossible. This is reassuring, since failure is not an option. Future generations of our people are depending on us. That’s why the future needs us now.

We Provide Aid to Vulnerable Jews

Tens of thousands of Jews around the world live in dire poverty, including nearly 90,000 elderly people in post-Soviet states who survived decades of oppression and, in many cases, the Holocaust.

Without the fundamental elements of survival, people cannot live a dignified life. That’s why we provide the essentials—food, medicine, clothing, shelter—as well as something invaluable: the knowledge that they are not forgotten, but remain part of a global Jewish community that will always have their back.
Liudmila Starikovich lives just a 10-minute walk from the nearest supermarket, but she’s entirely dependent on her JDC care team for food, medicine, personal hygiene items, and more. Disabled all her life and severely overweight due to a hormone condition, Liudmila hasn’t been outside in nine years.

“My JDC homecare worker is the sunshine in my window,” she said. “Since I have a cataract, she reads to me. She bathes me, she cooks for me, she does laundry for me, she cleans. She is my eyes, my legs, and my ears.”

Starikovich is one of nearly 90,000 elderly Jews JDC cares for across the former Soviet Union. Most live alone, and many live on pensions as low as $2/day. After paying her utility bills, Starikovich — a retired librarian and the daughter of two World War II veterans — is left with just $40 each month. Without JDC assistance, she’s sure she wouldn’t be able to survive.

“We Belarusians have lived through so many terrifying tragedies — Chernobyl, the war, the Holocaust,” she said. “It’s necessary to support those who are in need, and there are plenty of us. Without JDC support ... well, I don’t even want to think about that.”

Jewish values are at the heart of JDC’s mission and response, said Svetlana Marshak, the director of social work at the Hesed social welfare center in Minsk.

“Our work isn’t easy, and I can’t deny that we face difficulties,” she said. “Still, I love this work and I do it because I’m Jewish, our clients are Jews, and supporting the vulnerable means guaranteeing the future of our community.”

Marshak, who’s worked for JDC since 2005, said some cases move her to her core: Liudmila Starikovich is one of them.

“Many destinies have passed before my eyes over the years, but there are some cases that really reach the soul ... the ones where you realize that if JDC didn’t exist, we could really lose a person,” she said. “With Liudmila, the closest person in her life is her homecare worker. JDC has become her de facto family.”

“Providing Aid to Vulnerable Jews

Across 11 time zones and 11 countries, JDC provides more than 18 million hours of home health care each year and operates 69 Hesed social welfare centers — the largest Jewish humanitarian relief effort since World War II. But that scale isn’t what Starikovich thinks about each day.

For her, JDC is closer to home, more intimate: It’s a hot meal delivered, a comforting conversation, a dignified life.

“This organization has helped me since 1998 and I’ve never encountered anything other than utter kindness and understanding. They know the needs of a person,” she said. “It’s not only the aid they provide — they just get it.”

BY THE NUMBERS

55,000 VULNERABLE JEWS receive aid from JDC on any given day.

In 2018, we provided 18,139,038 HOURS of home health care for elderly Jews.
We Cultivate a Jewish Future

We believe the Jewish part of Jewish life is worth fighting for. That’s why we work hand-in-hand with communities around the world, empowering them to realize their own dreams and care for their most vulnerable. This means giving Jews from Minsk to Mumbai pathways to express their Jewish identity and encouraging grassroots efforts that welcome Jews of all ages and backgrounds.

Our global Jewish service program, where young volunteers support their fellow Jews and others in need, is the largest in the world — and growing. We are not only sustaining Jewish life today, but building new generations of leaders capable of taking on tomorrow’s challenges and shaping the future of Jewish life.
Building Strong Global Connections

For many young American Jews, “Jewish community” means family, their synagogue, perhaps a summer camp or youth group. But for Samantha Levinson, community extends much further.

Levinson is community and program manager for Junction, the partnership between JDC, the Schusterman Family Foundation, and Yesod that catalyzes a network of young European Jews taking an active part in fostering Jewish life relevant to their generation and beyond.

How does an American Jew from Virginia find her way to the heart of Europe’s reemerging Jewish communities? For Levinson, the answer was JDC Entwine’s Global Jewish Service Corps (JSC) Fellowship.

Every year, the fellowship offers college graduates and young professionals the opportunity to spend a year overseas volunteering with a community in one of the 70 countries where JDC works. It’s a powerful way to develop leaders and deepen an understanding of the global Jewish world.

While visiting Jewish communities abroad as co-president of BBYO, the international Jewish teen movement and longtime JDC partner, Levinson — then a teenager — frequently found herself crashing on the couches of JSC Fellows.

She realized quickly that she wanted to follow in their footsteps, and after graduation, she made her dream a reality. She moved to Budapest and became a JSC Fellow, working for Junction.

Her involvement in a pan-European program helped Levinson build a stronger connection to a Jewish world that had often felt remote.

“Jewish life was usually so America-centric for me,” she said. “JDC opened up what global Jewish life could look like.”

What she discovered is a diverse community of young Jews taking the future into their own hands — which often means building Jewish community themselves.

“They’re saying, ‘Yes, we have to do something and we have to do it now, during the biggest drop-off point in Jewish communal life,’” she said. “If we want to be resilient, if we want to be sustainable, we have to figure out how to put young people in the driver’s seat.”

Extending her placement for a second year, Levinson became a mentor to the new class of JSC Fellows, organizing a speaker series to showcase Jewish “communal professional superstars.” Last year, she joined the Junction team full-time.

Two of the young leaders she’s worked to support are Beni Hess and Bini Guttmann, co-founders of the Austrian Union of Jewish Students, a democratic organization for Austrian Jews aged 18 to 35. The Union has revitalized Jewish life for this new generation by giving them avenues to engage in politics, culture, and student life through a Jewish lens.

Through a micro-grant, Junction provided Hess and Guttmann with crucial startup funds: Even a relatively small investment can give a young adult the resources to bring their vision to life, and to effect meaningful, transformative change in their community.

“Junction helped us in an incredible way,” Guttmann said. “Only with the generous funding of events and the enormous network they offer were we able to organize all this while studying and working.”

For many Junction partners, the connection with other like-minded young Jews is invaluable.

“Junction has been a source of inspiration and networking with other passionate Jewish social entrepreneurs from all over Europe,” said Dekel Peretz, program director of the revived Fraenkelufer Jewish community in Berlin. “At Junction events, we found new partners and ideas, as well as acquired a deeper understanding of how what we do fits into a bigger picture of European Jewish revival.”

Today, Junction is building bridges beyond Europe with Global CoLab — a collaboration between Entwine and Junction that brings together young Jewish leaders and changemakers from around the world for a global gathering rooted in Jewish responsibility. Now in its third year, CoLab has been a successful and natural outgrowth of the relationship built through JDC Fellows like Levinson.

“Cultivating a Jewish future means more than just supporting Jewish communities around the world,” says Diego Ormique, JDC’s co-chief program officer. “It’s about bringing community leaders together, sharing best practices, and amplifying younger voices. Programs like Junction and JSC are how we create a truly interconnected global Jewish community.”

Levinson has seen this cultural exchange firsthand: It is at the heart of her experiences with both Entwine and Junction, and it’s made her optimistic about the next generations of Jewish life.

Take it from someone whose Jewish community spans continents: “There are so many things to learn from each other. We’re much more similar than we are different.”
We Unlock Human Capital for the Startup Nation

Every Israeli should have the chance to succeed. Making that vision a reality means addressing the nation’s most complex social challenges.

At JDC, we break cycles of poverty among the most vulnerable, foster inclusion and independence for the elderly and people with disabilities, and provide access to opportunity for all. To drive this change, we bring together all of our partners — the Government of Israel, the business sector, and NGOs — and draw on the same can-do spirit that made the desert bloom. Our innovative solutions become part of the fabric of Israeli life, and then get exported across the globe, lifting lives from the U.S. to Ethiopia to Japan.
From Unemployable to Employer

Fifteen years ago, Shlomo Goldberg had no job, no resume, and no professional education. But as a member of Israel’s Haredi community, that wasn’t unusual.

At the time, nearly three in four Haredim lived below the poverty line, and fewer than half of all Haredi men had any sort of employment. “In the Haredi community, most of the time we only study Torah, and we don’t study general subjects,” Goldberg said. “When we want to join the workforce, we have a gap that needs to be bridged.”

In a community with widespread unemployment among men and underemployment among women, poverty is a systemic problem. Tackling it requires more than just welfare—it means empowering Haredim to develop the skills they need to both secure employment and to thrive.

“In the Haredi community, most of the time we only study Torah, and we don’t study general subjects,” Goldberg said. “When we want to join the workforce, we have a gap that needs to be bridged.”

Shlomo was an early participant in Parnasa Be’Kavod’Employment with Dignity, one of JDC’s first Haredi employment programs designed to offer professional training to Haredi men in a safe, inviting environment. JDC operates programs like Parnasa Be’Kavod with the full support of Haredi community leaders and rabbis; the goal is not to draw yeshiva students away from their learning, but instead to provide options for those whose future lies outside the yeshiva world or who wish to incorporate work into yeshiva life.

In the years since, JDC has continued to refine and expand its Haredi employment initiative. In 2006, it piloted the first Mafteach training center—a facility, run entirely by members of the Haredi community, where JDC could fully implement its holistic approach to preparing Haredim for the workforce. The pilot was a success. Today, there are 12 Mafteach centers with the combined capacity to serve 10,000 Haredi Israelis every year.

The success and growth of the Mafteach centers is emblematic of JDC’s unique partnership with the Government of Israel. In 2016, JDC handed off the operation of the centers to the government, which has the resources to maintain and grow the program. In this way, JDC provides social R&D, creating innovative approaches to serve Israelis in need, the best of which then become government services on a national scale.

Over the past 10 years, JDC has increased Haredi employment among men by 10 percent and among women by almost 20 percent. Thanks in part to JDC’s transformative work, more than half of the men in Israel’s Haredi community now have jobs.

Goldberg is one of the men whose life was transformed by JDC’s employment programs. He graduated Parnasa Be’Kavod with skills in programming, and was able to find a job putting those skills into practice. At the same time, he began writing a blog titled HaRav DotNet. The first kosher Hebrew blog for programmers, HaRav DotNet quickly became popular, launching Goldberg to stardom within the Haredi community as a public speaker.

By sharing his story, he now inspires others to reimagine their lives and take proactive steps to become self-sufficient.

Four years ago, Goldberg took the next step in his tech career: He opened his own software and web development company, named after his blog. Today, HaRav DotNet is an in-demand developer that’s created systems for companies like Microsoft and Amdocs, as well as the Israeli government. Goldberg has 20 employees, almost all of them Haredi men.

In his transformation from unemployable to employer, Goldberg epitomizes the powerful ripple effect JDC’s employment work has had—and continues to have—on the Haredi population. He is not just a successful entrepreneur; he is empowering the next generation of Haredi men, giving them the same “employment with dignity” JDC helped him achieve all those years ago.

“We’re proud of our work to advance employment opportunities for Haredi men, one of the many chronically underemployed groups we focus on,” said Sigal Shelach, Director General of JDC Israel. “We know that when we lift the lives of Israel’s most vulnerable populations, we strengthen the whole country and ensure a bright future for all Israelis. and for Jews all over the world.”

We Rescue Jews in Danger

Jews around the world still face threats — anti-Semitism, violence, and social and economic upheaval. While our priority is always to help Jewish communities live safely where they choose, when those threats endanger Jewish lives or Jewish life, we have the reach, relationships, and resources to act. We’re there with the boots on the ground and know-how to take them out of harm’s way.

For over a century, we have been the 9-1-1 of the Jewish people, and we will continue to be there at a moment’s notice, wherever and whenever we are needed.
Where Are They Now: Three Stories of Rescue

A public health advocate in Sarajevo, a retired Wall Street banker in New York, and a Holocaust survivor in Kharkov might seem to have little in common, but Nela Hasic, Claus Hirsch, and Meri Zegelman are linked by something ineffable and profound: All three are among the more than one million Jews rescued by JDC and its partners since 1914.

A Bosnian Jew, Hasic was living with her husband and two children in Sarajevo in 1992 when the four-year siege of that Balkan capital began. The Jewish community, operating in partnership with JDC, gave her just an hour to get to the airport and get on an emergency flight evacuating the city’s Jews to safety in Belgrade.

“It’s a big question: Would my family even be alive without JDC? Growing up, I knew that the Joint provided this, or helped us with that, but I didn’t really know what JDC was,” Hasic said. “Now, I know I’d never be where I am today without JDC. If I say that I’m blessed or lucky, it’s not enough.”

After 10 years in Israel, Hasic and her family returned to Sarajevo, where she joined JDC and helped launch the Women’s Health Empowerment Program (WHEP), which provides psychosocial support, mobile mammogram units, free aid packages, and more to breast cancer patients and survivors in the Balkans.

After 15 years, Hasic launched an independent nonprofit, ThinkPink, which continues the work and credits a JDC-sponsored soup kitchen with saving their lives.

The family lived there for seven years before coming to the United States, and Hirsch credits a JDC-sponsored soup kitchen with saving their lives.

“We saw firsthand what JDC is capable of and what it does for Jews in need. The most important thing was that they fed us,” said Hirsch, who retired from a career in finance 10 years ago and has been volunteering once a week for the JDC Archives ever since.

JDC is in the business of modern miracles, too. When war broke out in 2014 in eastern Ukraine, Holocaust survivors Meri and Leonid Zegelman had to flee their hometown of Lugansk, leaving with just two small suitcases for what they thought would be a week or two in evacuation.

When it became clear their relocation to Kharkov would be permanent, JDC staff provided food, medicine, and psychosocial support, helping the Zegelmans rent and get settled into a new apartment.

“Life felt like it had collapsed for us, but in Kharkov we immediately found like-minded people at JDC. Thanks to them, we know we’re not alone.”

Meri has become a Warm Homes volunteer in Kharkov, gathering other elderly Jews together for food, conversation, Jewish holiday celebrations, and more. She’s become a crown jewel of the city’s Jewish community, said Lily Krichevskaya, a volunteer at the city’s JDC-supported Hesed social welfare center.

“My story is just one of many,” said Zegelman. “JDC is the Red Cross. It’s part of the system of how the world is able to function.”

“For Hasic, it’s humbling and a little remarkable that the same organization has played such a profound role in her family’s story through the generations.”

“I can’t imagine the Jewish world without JDC. I tell my story from the ‘90s, others tell their story from the ‘40s, and my father would tell you a story of JDC helping him send his kids to summer camp,” she said. “JDC touches the lives of so many Jews and non-Jews that it’s really essential. We Lead the Jewish Response to Global Crises

When natural disasters or other calamities strike, we are the Jewish hands that help communities of all backgrounds and faiths rebuild. We’re on the ground when disaster hits to provide immediate relief, and we stay long after the emergency has passed—leveraging a century of experience and partnership to ensure those communities get back on their feet.

We also bring our expertise to slow-moving crises like endemic poverty, food insecurity, and the plight of refugees. We deploy the best of Israeli innovation in support of the UN Sustainable Development Goals and support Jewish communities from Greece to the Philippines on social action initiatives that lift lives all over the world every day.

We are driven by the Jewish value of tikkun olam to leave the world better than we found it, and repairing the world means taking action when we see people in need.
A Future for Subsistence Farmers

Crisis aren’t always hurricanes or typhoons. Sometimes the worst ones are slow-moving and silent, virtually invisible to an outsider.

That’s a truth second-generation Ethiopian farmer Mudin Mekuria knows all too well. He has spent much of his life tirelessly working his farm to support his wife and seven children. Unfortunately, his land is dry, sand-like, mineral-poor, and lacking a modern water supply system.

Just one of the 85 percent of Ethiopians who are smallholder farmers, Mudin has long struggled to make his crops grow. For these agriculturalists, the intergenerational cycle of poverty is exacerbated by a lack of access to basic farming fundamentals: the capital to buy what they need, the modern technology that can help improve yield and generate income, and the connection to a fair marketplace to ultimately sell their goods.

That’s where JDC’s Tikkun Olam Ventures program (TOV) comes in.

Starting with a two-year pilot program in Ethiopia, TOV launched with seven demonstration sites and more than 30 farmers. It is set to expand to provide loans to agricultural enterprises supporting 300–400 farmers, with the goal of reaching 4,000–5,000 Ethiopian farmers over a five-year period, benefiting more than 25,000 people overall.

Today, TOV is already changing lives.

“Since JDC brought this technology to us, we’ve conserved manpower and increased our yield. It’s helped fulfill our needs,” said Endale Tadesse Wakjira, TOV farmer and manager of Tatek Lesira, a youth farming cooperative. “Moving forward, we believe the technology will only help us more in the future.”

To enhance productivity, farmers are given access to irrigation and fertilization systems, and hybrid seeds designed to help grow tomatoes, onions, cabbages, and hot peppers. Mudin was the first farmer to sign up for TOV.

“All of the tomato plots in my area were heavily infected with viruses, but in my plot, I’ve produced salable tomatoes thanks to this new method. That’s proof to me,” he said. “I believe this technology will change the entire community.”

To help tackle the problem of capital for these farmers, the self-sustaining loan program enables the farmers to purchase the AgTech seeds, equipment, and technical support they need to increase their yields. Local farmers’ unions and agribusinesses also help the farmers get fair prices for their produce in previously untapped markets, like hotels, universities, and prisons. Repaid loans then go back into the loan fund, to be used by farmers in additional locations.

TIKKUN IN ACTION

Budapest’s “Charity Taxi”

When Tamas Horn founded Charity Taxi, he envisioned an organization that would not only provide much-needed resources to those in need but would also foster a sense of community and social responsibility.

Today, almost four years later, this dream is a reality. Charity Taxi collects donated goods, sorts them, and distributes them to villages around Budapest. This past summer, Tikkun in Action, a new grant program from JDC, awarded Tamas funds to help him take Charity Taxi, and his dreams, to the next level.

MARCH 2019

Cyclone Idai, Mozambique

Through its longtime partner, the Afya Foundation, JDC provided emergency medical supplies and deployed a response team, including a disaster relief expert and fluid media, to the hardest-hit areas.

I BELIEVE THIS TECHNOLOGY WILL CHANGE THE ENTIRE COMMUNITY.

That’s where JDC’s Tikkun Olam Ventures program (TOV) comes in.

Launched in October 2018, TOV aims to lift Ethiopia’s most vulnerable farmers out of poverty through a philanthropic loan fund that provides fairly priced loans, Israeli agritech and training, and access to new markets for crops.

Bold: Board Members and JDC donors whose generous support includes $10,000 or more for unrestricted humanitarian needs.
Second Century Campaign

The Second Century Campaign (SCC) aims to raise $200 million for JDC’s endowment, which will secure JDC’s essential core functions in the future and ensure that the organization will always be prepared to respond—whatever the future holds for the Jewish People.

A heartfelt Thank You to those who made a generous commitment to the Second Century Campaign.

The Wohl Society

JDC’s premier Maurice and Vivienne Wohl Society recognizes individuals and foundations that have achieved the highest level of philanthropic support for JDC of $18 million+ over their lifetimes, and who serve as an inspiration to all those who care about global Jewish life.

Wohl Society members are commemorated in the Wohl Garden at JDC’s Jerusalem campus.

JDC ANNUAL REPORT

2018-2019
The Warburg Society

Established in the spirit of JDC’s founder and first president, Felix M. Warburg, the Warburg Society honors those who have given $250,000 or more within the span of five years to JDC, helping to ensure that we continue our critical mission around the world. We thank our Warburg Society for accepting the holy mission of Arevit (mutual responsibility) and Tzedakah (charity).

JDC Entwine Volunteers

JDC would like to thank the 515 college students and young adults who in 2018 collectively contributed over 90,000 hours of service and peer exchange to meet diverse challenges in 25 overseas communities. Their time, leadership, and commitment continue to create lasting impact on the global Jewish world.
The Mishna tells us, ‘Whoever saves a life, it is considered as if he saved an entire world.’ What can we say then about Rabbi Yechiel Eckstein, z”l, who helped save tens of thousands?

Even as we mourn Rabbi Eckstein’s untimely passing this past February, we celebrate his legacy, which urges us all to tend to the needs of the most vulnerable among us, and is embodied in the organization he founded: the International Fellowship of Christians and Jews (IFCJ).

Now under the capable and strategic leadership of the Rabbi’s daughter, Yael Eckstein, IFCJ continues to be JDC’s staunch partner on behalf of vulnerable and impoverished elderly Jews in the former Soviet Union. Together, we bring them help, dignity, and hope in their final decades.”

— David Schizer, CEO, JDC

“... For my father’s entire life, the way that I honored him was by not sitting in his seat, since we have a biblical commandment to not sit in the seat of our parents. I realize now that I can honor him by taking on his vision of the Fellowship, by taking on this mission, by taking on what he created out of passion and wisdom and faith, and bringing it to the next level.

... As always, we will work in the spirit of togetherness, united in service to G-d with all who wish to join us.

“Alone each of us can do something, but together we can accomplish anything.”

— Yael Eckstein, President, IFCJ
